The meeting on Monday will be the arrived of its kind since the President called in the committee and read his message to Congress, dealing with the Mexican situation. Prior to that the Foreign Relations Committee were invited to the White House when the President felt that discussion of Mexican affairs in Congress should cease. At that time he told his callers little of his plans, but the gravity of the situation was emphasized by his evident wish that moderation should mark Congressional discussion of the subject.

Many prominent diplomats in Washington, as well as many army and navy officers have said all along that armed intervention was the only possible solution of the Mexican tangle. This opinion has been modified by regent redel victories. The oninion of the Mexican tangle. his opinion has been modified by re ent rebel victories. The opinion of those, best informed in Mexican affairs, is that even if the rebels encounter no sweeping reversals, a long time will elapse before they lay siege to Mexico City.
